When a parent hears “Your child is acting out” panic can strike. But not when your child is involved in one of Curtain Call’s many performance-based workshops! Acting out is the idea and can be a fun and terrific way of learning new skills and developing self confidence.

For nearly 20 years, Curtain Call, the non-profit theatre company in residence at The Sterling Farms complex on Newfield Avenue in Stamford, has been providing a safe, nurturing environment for people of all ages to explore the performing arts. Whether you’re a seasoned professional or rank beginner, we’ve got something for you!

Our year-round workshops, taught by area professionals dedicated to nurturing and inspiring the community in the performing arts, cover a wide range of topics: basic acting instruction, improvisation, comedy, on-camera work, musical theatre, Shakespeare and more! Workshops are offered fall, winter and spring, after school, weekends and evenings and run an average of eight weeks per session.

There’s something always happening at Curtain Call. With two venues, The Kweskin Theatre and The Dressing Room Theatre, live performances of great musicals, comedies, dramas and more provide great opportunities for families to participate, on stage, backstage, or in the audience. With a dozen productions to be a part of each year, the opportunities are almost endless.
